

Small Signals

Field notes for observant walks

Issue 01

A foldable publication

Contents

|   |                  |   |
|---|------------------|---|
| 1 | Read the Curb    | 3 |
| 2 | Borrowed Shade   | 4 |
| 3 | Window Weather   | 5 |
| 4 | A Pocket Archive | 6 |

Colophon

Date: Spring 2026

Editor: Community Print Workshop

Publisher: Community Print Workshop

Location: Made for local printing

License: Creative Commons Attribution 4.0

Printing: Black text with one spot-color accent

Notes: Source articles are plain text and may be revised before printing.

Typeset and imposed with zinegen.

A Pocket Archive

By Sol Reyes

A useful archive can fit inside one envelope. Save a transit receipt, a fallen label, a quick sketch, and one sentence overheard with permission to record it. Add the place and date to each item.

At the end of the month, arrange the pieces by color instead of time. New neighbors appear between events that seemed unrelated when they happened.

Read the Curb

By Mara Cole

A curb records small decisions. Fresh paint marks a repair. Seeds collect where rain slows. Tire dust gathers near the turn. Walk one block at half speed and write down each change in material.

Repeat the walk after rain. Compare the notes and circle every sign of water. That map tells a quieter story than the street signs do.

Borrowed Shade

By Nico Bell

Trees cast public rooms across private boundaries. At noon, note where people pause without planning to stop. A narrow strip of shade can become a bench, a meeting point, or a place to set down groceries.

Trace the shade with chalk if the surface permits it. Return an hour later. The moving edge is a simple clock shared by everyone on the block.

Window Weather

By Iris Penn

Windows give weather a frame. Choose one view and describe it without naming the season. Record the color of the light, the speed of branches, and the direction people lean as they walk.

Keep the description for six months. When you read it again, the omitted season may feel clearer than a date written at the top of the page.